

The Crocodilogist

For almost a year, crocodilogist Alphonse Dinklaker was able to study dozens of the fearsome reptiles up close, thanks to a lifelike body suit that was impossible to distinguish from a real crocodile. Or so he thought. But then one day, Madge, a two-year old female, abruptly saw through the disguise, spread the word among her mates, and ... well, suffice it to say that Alphonse never did get to finish writing his memoir, "My Life Among the Maneaters."
