

Radio Activity

When Dinklakerville Deputy Mayor Harlan Pringler received word from a reliable source that radioactivity had been detected in Smoodt Memorial Park, he alerted the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, which immediately dispatched a HazMat Cleanup Team. Within the hour, a dozen men in smartly matching azure PPE suits descended on the park waving Geiger counters and doing a respectful cover of Imagine Dragons’ “Radioactive” music video. However, it soon became apparent that the reliable source, while probably well intentioned, was negligent in not inserting a space between “radio” and “activity” to the tune of 9,000 emergency response dollars, a sum that to this day remains contested by Dinklakerville counsel.
