

That Pesky Third Law

Louise and Edna Pringler were so relieved that water was again falling from the sky onto their long parched land that they didn't even question the source of the water. And if they had looked up, they would've just had to question Newton's Third Law of Motion (For every action, there is an equal and opposite reaction.), and who needed that sort of aggravation on a hot summer day!?